A dozen people from a range of positions throughout the county were selected to participate in the fourth annual AgVenture program.

AgVenture is a concept in agricultural education designed for non-farming community leaders who want to understand the workings of the industry, according to Terry Dereniuk, AgVenture program coordinator and a graduate of the 2010 AgVenture program.

There were four classes held once a month. In August, the class focus was on the pear industry, the September class focused on grapes, the October class focused on walnuts and the final class on Friday focused on olives.
